As a result, you will enjoy unrivalled career opportunities in a range of industries.

WHAT DO CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS DO?

Qualifying as an ICAEW Chartered Accountant opens up a huge number of potential career paths.

You could find yourself analysing a fashion brand's finances, advising charities on tax, or working on the board of a multinational consumer company.

THEY'RE TRUSTED TO:

ASSESS

From Premier League football clubs to huge multinational companies, chartered accountants look at how money flows in and out, measure the value of assets, and analyse how organisations are performing.

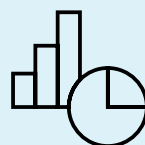

AUDIT

From charities to banks, fashion houses to NHS Trusts, auditors work across every sector to independently confirm the trustworthiness of financial figures. It's work that can take you all around the world.

ADVISE

Companies turn to chartered accountants when they want to launch a new product, buy another company or improve the way they operate. That's why many chartered accountants move into chief executive officer (CEO) roles and other senior leadership positions.

ANALYSE

Calculating the worth of a company's physical goods might seem relatively straightforward, but how do you measure the value of a brand, or measure the impact of climate change on the valuation of assets? That's where you come in.

I'm passionate about the ACA because it opens so many doors.

Dale Pollitt

Co-owner and Director of
Ryans Chartered Accountants

I was entrepreneurial from a young age. I was the kid selling sweets and fizzy drinks in the school yard. I was always interested in making money, which is probably the reason I did Business Studies GCSE and went on to win the Business Studies Award at my high school.

I joined Ryans at the age of 21, switching from a different qualification to the ACA. Five years later, I was offered partnership, which was a big step in my career. My job involves day-to-day management of a diverse portfolio of clients, helping them to grow at scale and achieve their dreams.

I still have that entrepreneurial mindset. A client who was one of the pioneers of the food hall industry approached me and my business partner to become involved in a project. It was tough but very satisfying to see something come from a blank canvas, giving the local population a fantastic new hospitality venue.

DEGREE OR NO DEGREE?

There are a variety of different routes to becoming an ICAEW Chartered Accountant. You can start your journey straight from school, while you're at university or after you have graduated.

//

As an internal auditor, I look at different areas of the business.

Evie Dolega-Ossowski

Internal Auditor, Marks & Spencer

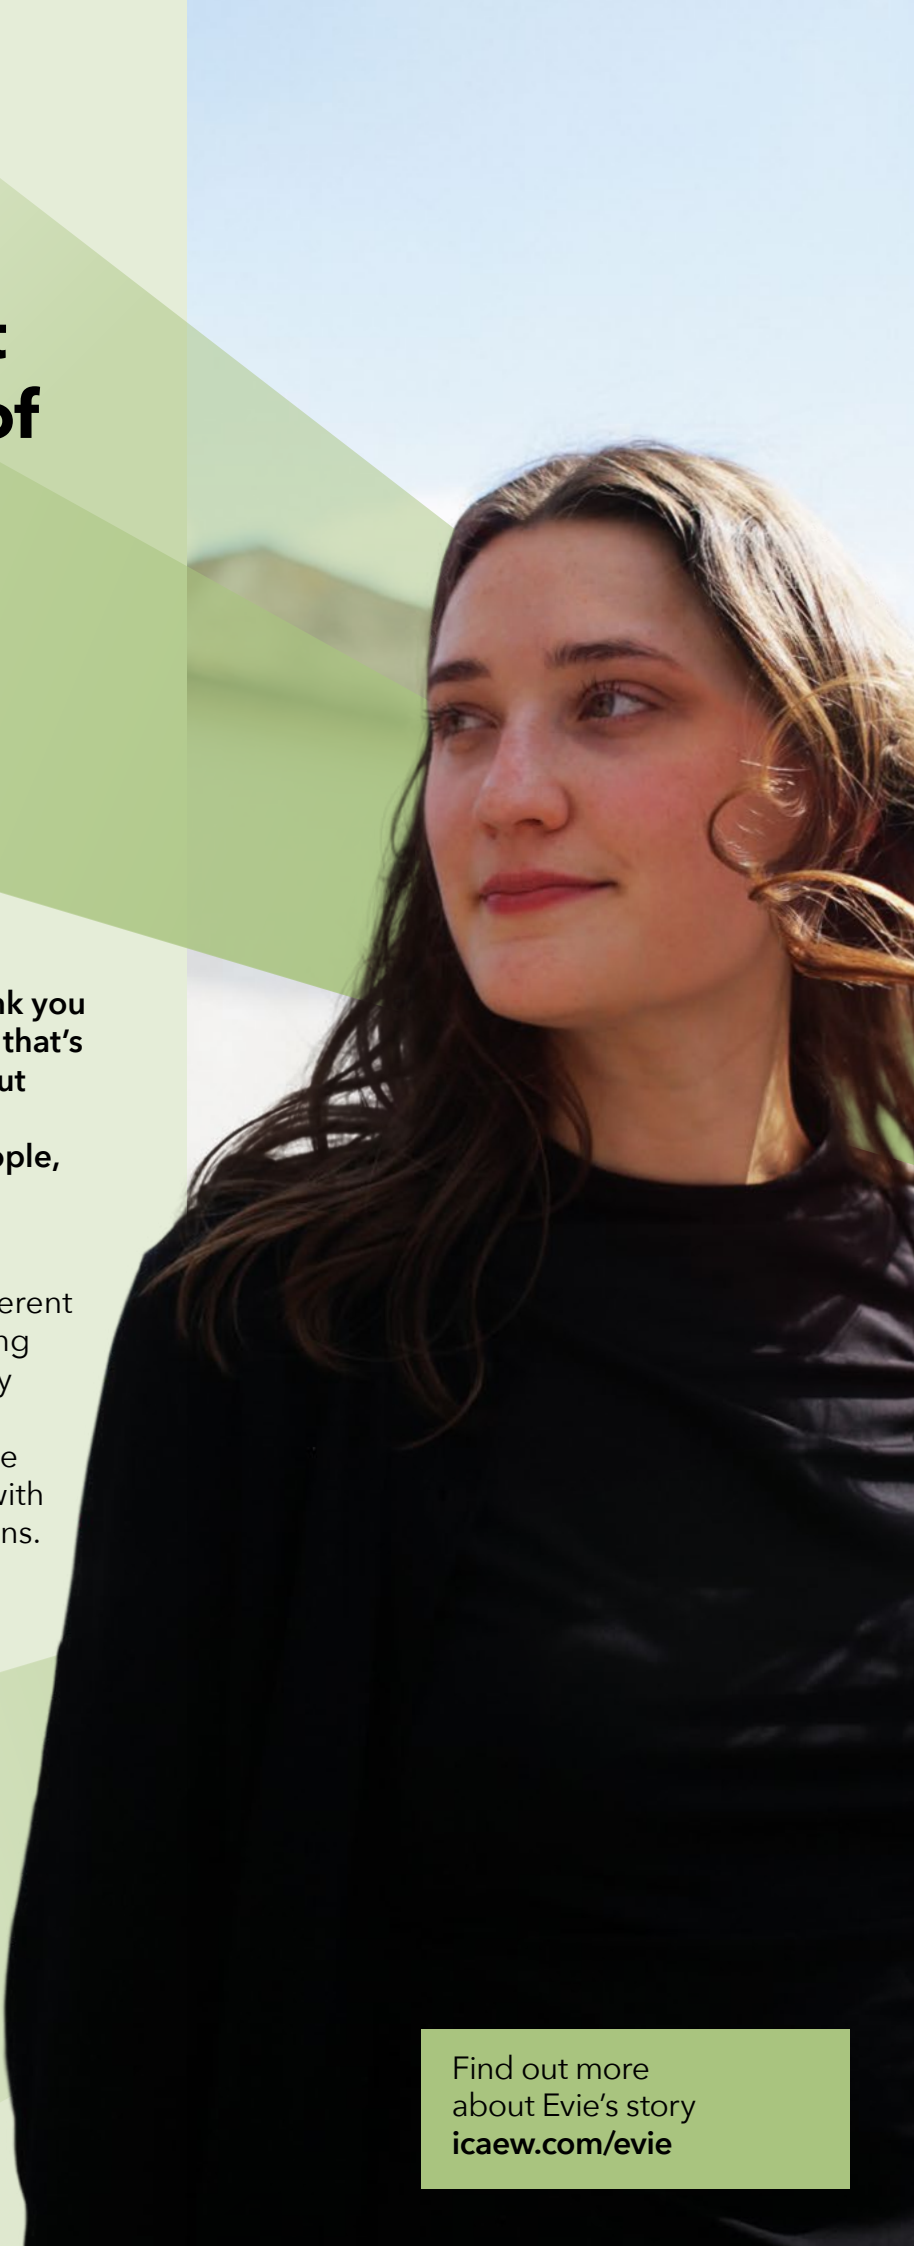

When you tell someone you're an accountant or an auditor, they think you must be really good at maths. But that's not necessarily true. It's more about critical thinking and being able to analyse, interpret data, talk to people, build relationships, and challenge conventional wisdom.

As an internal auditor, I look at different areas of the business - from clothing to food, and from finance to supply chain. My job is to understand the processes involved and how we are managing risk factors associated with our many interconnected operations.

I studied the ACA under an apprenticeship programme, so I got to work and build up skills around things like communication and teamworking, while also studying the technical side of accounting. Even after you've completed your exams, there's always somebody to talk to if you need help.

// I see my career as a series of stepping stones, built on the foundation of the ACA.

Corinne Thompson
CEO and Founder of ECAP Financial

I studied geography at university but after I graduated I decided I wanted to work in finance. I initially started my training as an accountant at a big four accounting firm. There was a perception at the time that an accountant sits in a broom cupboard and crunches a bunch of numbers. It hasn't been like that for me. Accounting can open so many doors.

I've been in the technology space for 12 years, mainly holding financial director-type roles. Last year, I started my own business, working with founders who need my specialist skills and knowledge to help scale their business.

I see my career as a series of stepping stones, built on the foundation of the ACA. There's no limit to what you can achieve if you have the appetite.
